k

ka 1
ka the first consonant of the alphabet, and the first guttural letter (corresponding in sound to k in keep or king)
kakāra
○kāra m. the letter or sound ka TPrāt
kavat
○vat mfn. having the word ka NBD
kavarga
○varga m. the gutturals (of which ka is the first letter) TPrāt. Siddh. (cf. vargá.)
ka 2
ká kas, kā, kim, interrog. pron. (kim and 2. kad, and the. following words in which the interrogative base ka appears, katama, katara, kati, katham, kadā, karhi, kā, &c.), who? which? what? In its declension ka follows the pronoun tad except in nom. acc. sing. neut., where kim has taken the place of kad or kat in classical Sanskṛit
• but the old form kad is found in the Veda (Gram. 227) ; [Zd. ka, kô, kâ, kat
• Gk. ?, ?, (Ion. ?, ?,) ?, ? ; Lat. quis, [240, 2] quid ; Lith. kas ká ; Goth. hvas, hvô, hva, Angl. Sax. hwā, hwaet ; Eng. who, what.] The interrogative sentence introduced by ka is often terminated by iti (e.g. kasya sa putra iti kathyatām, let it be said, 'whose son is he?'), but iti may be omitted and the sentence lose its direct interrogative character (e.g. kasya sa putro na jñāyate, it is not known whose son he is). ka with or without √1. as may express 'how is it possible that?' 'what power have I, you, they, &c.?' (e.g. ke mama dhanvino'nye, what can the other archers do against me? ke āvām paritrātum, what power have we to rescue you?) ka is often connected with a demonstrative pron. (e.g. ko'yam āyāti, who comes here?) or with the potential (e.g. ko hariṃ nindet, who will blame Hari?) ka is sometimes repeated (e.g. kaḥ ko'tra, who is there? kān kān, whom? whom? i.e. which of them? Gram. 54), and the repetition is often due to a kind of attraction (e.g. keṣāṃ kiṃ śāstram adhyayanīyam, which book is to be read by whom? Gram. 836. a). When kim is connected with the inst. c. of a noun or with the indecl. participle it may express 'what is gained by doing so, &c.?' (= ko'rthas) [Page 240, Column 3]
• (e.g. kiṃ vilambena, what is gained by delay? kim bahunā, what is the use of more words? dhanena kiṃ yo na dadāti, what is the use of wealth to him who does not give? with inst. and gen., nīrujaḥ kim auṣadhaiḥ, what is the use of medicine to the healthy?) ka is often followed by the particles iva, u, nāma, nu, vā, svid, some of which serve merely to generalize the interrogation (e.g. kim iva etad, what can this be? ka u śravat, who can possibly hear? ko nāma jānāti, who indeed knows? ko nv ayam, who, pray, is this? kiṃ nu kāryam, what is to be done? ko vā devād anyaḥ, who possibly other than a god? kasya svid hṛdayaṃ nâsti, of what person is there no heart?) ka is occasionally used alone as an indefinite pronoun, especially in negative sentences (e.g. na kasya ko vallabhaḥ, no one is a favourite of any one
• nânyo jānāti kaḥ, no one else knows
• kathaṃ sa ghātayati kam, how does he kill any one?) Generally, however, ka is only made indefinite when connected with the particles ca, caná, cid, vā, and ápi, in which case ka may sometimes be preceded by the relative ya (e.g. ye ke ca, any persons whatsoever
• yasyai kasyai ca devatāyai, to any deity whatsoever
• yāni kāni ca mitrāṇi, any friends whatsoever • yat kiṃca, whatever). The particle cana, being composed of ca and na, properly gives a negative force to the pronoun (e.g. yasmād indrād ṛte kiṃcana, without which Indra there is nothing), but the negative sense is generally dropped (e.g. kaścana, any one • na kaścana, no one), and a relative is sometimes connected with it (e.g. yat kiṃcana, anything whatsoever). Examples of cid with the interrogative are common

• vā and api are not so common, but the latter is often found in classical Sanskṛit (e.g. kaścid, any one
• kecid, some
• na kaścid, no one
• na kiṃcid api, nothing whatsoever
• yaḥ kaścid, any one whatsoever
• kecit - kecit, some - others
• yasmin kasmin vā deśe, in any country whatsoever
• na ko'pi, no one
• na kimapi, nothing whatever). ka may sometimes be used, like 2. kad, at the beginning of a compound. ka-pūya, &c

katham
kathám ind. (fr. 2. ka), how? in what manner? whence? (e.g. katham etat, how is that? katham idānīm, how now? what is now to be done? katham mārâtmake tvayi viśvāsaḥ, how can there be reliance on thee of murderous mind? katham utsṛjya tvāṃ gaccheyam, how can I go away deserting you? katham buddhvā bhaviṣyati sā, how will she be when she awakes? katham mṛtyuḥ, prabhavati vedavidām, whence is it that death has power over those that know the Veda? katham avagamyate, whence is it inferred?)

• sometimes katham merely introduces an interrogation (e.g. katham ātmānaṃ nivedayāmi kathaṃ vâtmâpahāraṃ karomi, shall I declare myself or shall I withdraw?) katham is often found in connection with the particles iva, nāma, nu, svid, which appear to generalize the interrogation (how possibly? how indeed? &c.)
• with nu it is sometimes = kimu, or kutas (e.g. katkaṃ nu, how much more! na kathaṃ nu, how much less!) katham is often connected, like kim, with the particles cana, cid, and api, which give an indefinite sense to the interrogative (e.g. kathaṃ cana, in any way, some how
• scarcely, with difficulty
• na kathaṃ cana, in no way at all
• kathaṃcit, some how or other, by some means or other, in any way, with some difficulty, scarcely, in a moderate degree, a little
• na kathaṃcit, not at all, in no way whatever
• na kathaṃcid na, in no way not, i.e. most decidedly
• yathā kathaṃcit, in any way whatsoever
• kathaṃcid yadi jīvati, it is with difficulty that he lives
• katham api, some how or other, with some difficulty, scarcely a little
• katham api na, by no means, not at all) RV. &c
• according to lexicographers katham is a particle implying amazement
• surprise
• pleasure
• abuse

kim

kím ind. (fr. 1. ki, originally nom. and acc. sg. n. of 2. ká, q.v.), what? how? whence? wherefore? why? [Page 282, Column 3]

» kim

kim is much used as a particle of interrogation like the Lat. num, an, sometimes translatable by 'whether?' but oftener serving only like a note of interrogation to mark a question (e.g. kiṃ vyādhā vane'smin saṃcaranti, 'do hunters roam about in this wood?' In an interrogation the verb, if uncompounded with a preposition, generally retains its accent after kim Pāṇ. 8-1, 44). To this sense may be referred the kim expressing inferiority, deficiency, &c. at the beginning of compounds (e.g. kiṃ-rājan, what sort of king? i.e. a bad king Pāṇ. 2-1, 64 ; v, 4, 70)

• also the kim prefixed to verbs with a similar meaning (e.g. kim-adhī7te, he reads badly Pāṇ. 8-1, 44 Kāś.) kim-uta, or kim-uta-vā or kim-athavā-uta, whether-or-or R. Śak. Bhartṛ. &c. (cf. utá.)

» kim
kim is very frequently connected with other particles, as follows: kím aṅgá, wherefore then? RV
• atha kim, átha
• kim api, somewhat, to a considerable extent, rather, much more, still further Śak. Megh. &c
• kim iti, why? Śak. Kum. Pañcat. &c
• kim-iva, what for? Śiś. xvi, 31
• kím-u or kím-utá how much more? how much less? RV. ŚBr. MBh. &c
• kiṃ kila, what a pity! (expressing dissatisfaction) Pāṇ. 3-3, 146
• kiṃ-ca, moreover, further Pañcat. Kathās. &c
• what more (expressing impatience) Śak
• kiṃ-cana (originally -ca na, negative = 'in no way'), to a certain degree, a little Kathās
• (with a negation) in no way, not at all MBh. i, 6132
• kiṃ-cid, somewhat, a little MBh. R. &c • kiṃ tarhi, how then? but, however Pāṇ. 2-2, 4 Pat. ; iv, 1, 163, Kaś
• kiṃ-tu, but, however, nevertheless (bearing the same relation to tu that kiṃ-ca bears to ca) MBh. R. &c
• kiṃ-nu, whether indeed? (a stronger interrogative than kim alone) MBh. R. &c
• how much more? how much less? Bhag. i, 35
• kiṃ nu khalu, how possibly? (a still stronger interrogative) Śak
• kim punar, how much more? how much less? R. Bhag. ix, 33 &c

• in the more recent he is deified, and is often represented as a young and amorous shepherd with flowing hair and a flute in his hand
• the following are a few particulars of his birth and history as related in Hariv. 3304 ff. and in the Purāṇas &c.: Vasu-deva, who was a descendant of Yadu and Yayāti, had two wives, Rohiṇī and Devakī
• the latter had eight sons of whom the eighth was Kṛishṇa
• Kaṃsa, king of Mathurā and cousin of Devakī, was informed by a prediction that one of these sons would kill him
• he therefore kept Vasu-deva and his wife in confinement, and slew their first six children
• the seventh was Balarāma who was saved by being abstracted from the womb of Devakī and transferred to that of Rohiṇī
• the eighth was Kṛishṇa who was born with black skin and a peculiar mark on his breast
• his father Vasu-deva managed to escape from Mathurā with the child, and favoured by the gods found a herdsman named Nanda whose wife Yaśo-dā had just been delivered of a son which Vasu-deva conveyed to Devakī after substituting his own in its place. Nanda with his wife Yaśo-dā took the infant Kṛishṇa and settled first in Gokula or Vraja, and afterwards in Vṛindāvana, where Kṛishṇa and Bala-rāma grew up together, roaming in the woods and joining in the sports of the herdsmen's sons
• Kṛishṇa as a youth contested the sovereignty of Indra, and was victorious over that god, who descended from heaven to praise Kṛishṇa, and made him lord over the cattle [Hariv. 3787 ff. ; 7456 ff. VP.]
• Kṛishṇa is described as sporting constantly with the Gopīs or shepherdesses [Hariv. 4078 ff. ; 8301 ff. VP. Gīt.] of whom a thousand became his wives, though only eight are specified, Rādhā being the favourite [Hariv. 6694 ff. ; 9177 ff. VP.]
• Kṛishṇa built and fortified a city called Dvārakā in Gujarāt, and thither transported the inhabitants of Mathurā after killing Kaṃsa
• Kṛishṇa had various wives besides the Gopīs, and by Rukmiṇī had a son Pradyumna who is usually identified with Kāma-deva
